IMPORTANT ARREST.

Denton County Murderer Captured in Waco.

Sheriff Burke's alert deputies cornered another bad man Wednesday evening, but as a matter of prudence the matter was not divulged until this morning.

Joe Roper, who is wanted at Denton, Denton county, for the murder of a man at that place, was captured in Barkers' Alley by Deputies Torrence, Sheppard and Russell, who got the drop on the fugitive before the latter could say "Jack Robinson," and locked him up in the county jail.

Roper said this morning that he did not know the name of the man he had killed, and the deputies were not informed. Roper skipped out after the killing and this is the first time he has been seen since he left Denton.

This makes the third important arrest the efficient sheriff's efficient aids have taken in within a week.

The conclusion is that this is a bad place for criminals and they had better steer clear of Mr. Burke's myrmidons.

The Fruit Guessing.

BLUE FOR WALLING

Evidence of His Cotton Speculations Introduced.

THE FUTURES FIRM OF J. P. HILL &amp; CO

A Broker Disputes the Genuineness of Certain Notes.

In the Walling case yesterday afternoon United States Commissioner Finks heard the evidence of Mr. J. P. Hill, a grocery merchant of Brownwood, who also did a cotton futures business.

He testified for the government he did a cotton futures business under the firm name of J. P. Hill & Co., his partner being Glenn Parkes. They did business with the City National Bank both as a grocery and a cotton futures firm.

The firm of J. P. Hill & Co. got money from the bank at different times. They had two accounts, one for cotton and one for groceries.

The cotton futures account was kept in the books of the bank. J. P. Hill & Co. only obtained money for the cotton business and Mr. Parkes never objected to signing the firm's name to cotton transactions. Mr. Walling was interested with them in the cotton business, having made an agreement that the bank would furnish the money.

They bought from Attwood, Violet & Co., New Orleans, and Clause & Co., New York. In buying cotton futures they were not buying cotton in existence, but simply margins on the rise and fall of the market. Witness never saw the cotton. Usually they put up $1 a bale on cotton. Didn't know how many bales they had bought. The bank remitted the money on margins. The transactions were pretty heavy sometimes, from 500 to 4,000 bales being bought. They bought 4,000 in July or August, 1892.

This contract was not yet settled, and there was money now lying in New Orleans in the possession of Attwood, Violet & Co.

The money was remitted through the bank by Walling. When the check was sent the parties would surely call on him for a note. The firm had money with Attwood, Violet & Co. at that time, and they didn't remit more than $1,500, the profits derived from future dealings. Mr. Hill could not tell the aggregate amount of these dealings from first to last.

The grocery business of the firm was kept separate from the cotton business. The firm began dealing in futures in 1892. Walling and witness were talking about that time about the price of cotton, when Walling asked if it would not be a good investment; said he would like to go into it; that the bank would furnish the money.

Hill & Co.'s books showed, said Mr. Hill, that the bank was indebted to them for the grocery business about $3,800.

In answer to a question whether or not Hill & Co., did owe the bank $15,000, Mr. Hill said that Col. Goodwin, president of the bank, had called on them for $15,000. This was for the cotton futures business. He had never told Mr. Goodwin that he was interested in the cotton business with the defendant, although some of the cotton men knew the bank was supplying money, but he didn't know whether the bank knew it or not. Certified checks were signed by Walling as cashier. Witness took Walling's word as to the amount the cotton firm had with the bank.

The testimony of Mr. Hill is the most damaging yet made against Walling.

Cotton Broker Roberts of Brownwood testified yesterday afternoon that he had had cotton dealings with defendant.

Mr. N. B. Howlett, another Brownwood cotton man, testified this morning that Walling had done business with him and he had an account with the bank. He disputed the genuineness of several notes the bank held against him with his signature.

The court before noon took a recess until this afternoon, when Bookkeeper Smith will be introduced. Mr. Walling has no witnesses and it is not known whether he will make a statement or not.

The hearing will hardly be finished before noon tomorrow.

"Grocery stores, shoe and clothing stores, barber shops, restaurants, hotels, barrooms and poker rooms all have fans and are kept delightfully cool," said a prominent lawyer today, "and a man can feel comfortable while getting a drink, beefsteak or a pair of shoes, but the churches, usually the hottest places in all creation on account of the crowds, have never a fan and the congregation is kept in a stew from the preacher's first to fifteenth." Just why people should be compelled to suffer while at their devotions does not appear to me. A man should possess his soul in peace while engaged in worship as much
